“Not Even In Your Dreams”

A Powerful New Book About Child-rearing Practices, Cultures and Values

NOT EVEN IN YOUR DREAM is a powerful, true story about how four African-American children experienced the conflicting child-rearing practices that exist in Africa as opposed to those in the United States. Told from the perspective of one of the children, the reader becomes absorbed in the reality of how conflict between parents can change children's lives forever.

This is a personal story about the adventures of children whose mother wanted them to live a better life than what they were offered in the U.S. of the 1950s. It offers insights into the feelings, thoughts and strategies of children who had to depend on one another for their very survival. For readers of all ages.

About the Author

Madubuko A. Robinson Diakité (M.A., LL.M., Jur. Lic.) was born in New York City. As a teenager, he lived in Nigeria with his stepfather, who was a major journalist involved in the country's liberation movement from British rule. The lessons learned during those years encouraged him to develop his own interests in journalism and human rights. He travels widely, produces documentary films, gives seminars on human rights issues, and writes articles and books on the subject. He also publishes a newsletter dedicated to informing immigrants and migrant workers of their human rights. He frequently travels between New York City and Malmö, Sweden.
